DID YOU KNOW?

THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN PASTURE RAISED & FREE RANGE EGGS

PASTURE RAISED EGGS

Pasture raised eggs come from chickens that are allowed to roam freely in pastures during the day and sleep in a chicken house at night. This gives the chickens access to natural nutrition from grass, bugs, and worms, instead of commercial feed. Pasture raised hens are also given more space than free range hens, with the Humane Farm Animal Coalition (HFAC) requiring a minimum of 108 square feet per chicken. In addition, the fields where the chickens roam should be rotated, and the chickens should be kept outdoors all year.

FREE RANGE EGGS

Free range eggs (in the US) are produced by hens that have access to the outdoors during their laying cycle, as well as fresh food and water. The USDA requires that hens can't be kept in cages and must be able to see outside. The outdoor space can be fenced or covered, and the door doesn't have to be open, but there must be one.
